Prompt

Explain how the example from the professor's lecture illustrates goal displacement.

Reading

Goal Displacement Organizations often have a particular goal, and specific rules or procedures may be created to help achieve that goal. However, sometimes employees focus so much on the rules or procedures that it interferes with the organization's ability to achieve its goal. This is known as goal displacement. A goal becomes displaced when the rules or procedures meant to help individuals achieve a goal become more important than the goal itself. As a result, the organization may be less successful in accomplishing its goals.

Okay, so schools are a good example of a place where this can happen. We have schools of course, as a place for children to be educated and teachers are hired to actually educate the students. Right, their job is to ensure that the citizens of our society will have an education. But in order for teachers to give children a good education, there are various requirements they need to impose. Like for instance, coming to class on time, which is important. Right, for the learning process to go smoothly, it's directly related to making sure kids get a good education. But sometimes these requirements well, they can actually work against students getting a good education. Like say in one school they have a policy that students must always show up to class on time and a teacher in that school to ensure that students show up on time, the teacher insists that if students arrive late, they aren't allowed in the classroom and no matter what the reason, anytime a student shows up late, the teacher enforces this. Won't let them in the class. Well, although the policy seems to be in the best interest of a child getting a good education because it's meant to ensure students get the most possible learning time. Well, think about it. If students do end up showing up late to class for whatever reason, they'll have to miss the entire class, which means they'll miss out on the opportunity to learn. So in effect, too much emphasis on the policy can get in the way of the child's education.

Goal displacement occurs when an organization's procedures, meant to support a primary goal, become the main focus and actually hinder achieving that goal. The professor illustrates this with a school example. The school's main goal is student education, and a punctuality rule exists to support learning by maximizing class time. However, a teacher strictly enforces this by not allowing any late students into class. This rigid focus on the rule means that students who are late, for any reason, miss the entire lesson. Consequently, the procedure intended to aid education directly prevents it, demonstrating goal displacement as the rule becomes more important than the educational objective itself.

Goal displacement is when an organization's procedures, designed to support a primary goal, become the main focus and hinder that goal. The professor illustrates this with a school example. The school's paramount goal is student education. A punctuality rule exists in the service of this goal to maximize learning time. However, a teacher exhibits rigid adherence by not allowing any late students into class. This strict enforcement means students who are late miss the entire lesson. Consequently, the procedure backfires, directly preventing the education it was meant to aid. This demonstrates how the means become ends, thereby undermining the original objective—a perfect example of goal displacement.

The concept of goal displacement describes a situation where adherence to organizational rules overshadows the original objective, making the organization less effective. In the lecture, the professor uses a school scenario to explain this. The fundamental goal is to educate students, and a policy requires punctuality to facilitate this. But when a teacher prioritizes this rule by excluding all latecomers from class, it backfires. Students missing class entirely due to lateness lose valuable learning opportunities. Thus, the strict enforcement of the procedure displaces the core aim of education, clearly showing how goal displacement undermines the organization's success.
