Some people like to send text messages when they need information. Others prefer to call people on their cell phones for the information they need. Explain which method you prefer and why.

你的回答

Personally, I prefer calling people rather than sending text messages when I need information. There are two main reasons for this. First of all, calling is much faster and more efficient. When I text someone, I usually have to wait for them to reply, and sometimes the conversation takes a long time. But with a phone call, I can get the answer immediately and solve the problem right away. For example, if I need to confirm the time of a meeting, a quick call is much more convenient. Secondly, calling helps avoid misunderstandings. Text messages can sometimes be unclear, especially when the information is complicated. On the phone, I can explain my question more clearly and also hear the other person's tone, which makes communication smoother and more accurate. So overall, I believe calling is a better method because it saves time and allows for clearer communication.

Personally, I strongly prefer making a phone call over sending a text when I need information. I have two main reasons for this choice. First, calling is far more efficient. With a text, I might wait minutes or hours for a reply, but a call provides an immediate answer. For instance, if I need to confirm a meeting time, a quick thirty-second call resolves it instantly, avoiding a lengthy text exchange. Second, phone calls prevent misunderstandings. Text messages can be ambiguous, especially with complex details. On a call, I can clarify my question in real time and hear the other person's tone, which ensures accurate communication. Therefore, for both its speed and clarity, I believe calling is the superior method.

Topic Development	4

Delivery (表达) 4/4

Issues & Improvements

- ☐ Advanced improvement: Vary intonation patterns to emphasize key points.
- ☐ Advanced improvement: Slightly increase pace variation for natural flow.

Evidence

- ☐ Consistent, clear delivery throughout.
- ☐ Good use of pauses for structure.

Actionable Fixes

- ☐ Practice emphasizing words like 'immediately' and 'clearer' with higher pitch.
- ☐ Speed up slightly in descriptive parts, slow down on conclusions.

Language Use (语言运用) 4/4

Issues & Improvements

- ☐ Advanced improvement: Incorporate more sophisticated transition phrases.
- ☐ Advanced improvement: Use slightly more varied adjective-noun combinations.

Evidence

- ☐ Accurate grammar and effective vocabulary like 'misunderstandings' and 'efficient'.
- ☐ Good use of comparative structures: 'much faster and more efficient'.

Actionable Fixes

- ☐ Replace 'First of all' with 'Primarily' or 'The primary reason is'.
- ☐ Instead of 'smoother communication', try 'more nuanced exchange'.

Topic Development (内容展开) 4/4

Issues & Improvements

- ☐ Advanced improvement: Add a brief personal anecdote to strengthen the example.
- ☐ Advanced improvement: Explicitly connect the conclusion back to both reasons.

Evidence

- ☐ Clear stance in first sentence: 'I prefer calling'.
- ☐ Two well-developed reasons with specific examples: confirming meeting time.

Actionable Fixes

- ☐ Add a sentence: 'Just last week, I called to clarify a project detail that would have taken ten texts.'
- ☐ Modify final sentence to: 'Therefore, for both its efficiency and clarity, calling is superior.'

参考答案

参考答案1

I definitely prefer sending text messages when I need information. The primary reason is efficiency; texting is much faster for simple queries. For instance, if I need to confirm a meeting time with a colleague, I can send a quick text and get a reply without the formalities of a phone call, saving us both valuable time. Secondly, texting provides a written record. This is incredibly useful for details like addresses or instructions, as I can refer back to the message later instead of trying to remember a verbal conversation, which prevents potential errors.

参考答案2

Without a doubt, my preference is for texting over calling to obtain information. One significant advantage is its time-saving nature. A perfect example is when I need a quick answer from a friend, like a restaurant recommendation; a brief message exchange is far more expedient than a full phone conversation. Furthermore, having a tangible record of the information is a major benefit. If a family member texts me a shopping list, I have a permanent reference, eliminating the risk of forgetting items that can happen when details are only communicated verbally.
