#1 Imagine you are looking for a new place to live near your university. You have two choices. The first place is in a house, which you would share with several other students. The second place is a small apartment, which you would not have to share with others. Which would you choose? Explain why.

你的回答

I'd choose the small apartment where I don't have to share with anyone. First of all, it would help me stay focused. When you live in a shared house, there's almost always noise—people talking, cooking late at night, or inviting friends over. If I have an exam or a big paper, that kind of environment would really distract me. In my own apartment, I can control everything: the quiet, the lighting, and my schedule, so I can study more efficiently. Second, it's simply less stressful. Sharing a house usually means dealing with roommate issues like cleaning, splitting bills, and using the kitchen or bathroom at the same time. Even small problems can become daily headaches. Living alone lets me avoid conflicts and saves time and energy. Sure, a shared house might be cheaper and more social, but for me, privacy and a stable, quiet space are more important. That's why I would choose the small apartment.

I would definitely choose the small apartment where I don't have to share with anyone. My primary reason is the need for a quiet, focused study environment. In a shared house, there is often noise from roommates talking, cooking, or having friends over, which would be a major distraction during exams or when writing papers. In my own apartment, I can control the noise level and lighting to study more efficiently. Secondly, living alone is simply less stressful. It helps me avoid potential conflicts over shared responsibilities like cleaning, bills, and bathroom schedules. While a shared house might be cheaper and more social, my personal preference is for privacy and a stable, peaceful space that supports my academic goals.

If I were choosing a place to live near my university, I would definitely select the small apartment. My primary reason is that it provides a quiet, private environment essential for effective studying. For instance, in a shared house, noise from roommates can easily disrupt concentration, whereas in my own apartment, I could study for exams without interruptions. Secondly, having my own space means greater personal freedom and comfort. I wouldn't have to coordinate schedules or share belongings, allowing me to relax and manage my time according to my own preferences, which is vital for reducing stress during the academic year.

I would opt for the small apartment without hesitation. The most significant advantage is the undisturbed study environment it offers. Unlike a shared house where communal activities and noise are common, a private apartment ensures I can focus entirely on my coursework, such as preparing for important presentations. Additionally, living alone grants me complete autonomy over my living space. I can organize my routine and personal items without needing to accommodate others, fostering a sense of independence and well-being that supports both my academic performance and personal life.
